

Child Safety On-Line

Parents are invited to log on at thinkuknow.co.uk to receive regular updates that cover all aspects of what children are doing online.

Jim Gamble is head of the CEOP Centre (Child Exploitation and Online Protection Centre) and said at an education conference recently:

“No one wants to think about child safety at Christmas. But as the months roll on and your children get more and more involved in the online world – a world that is often opened up around Christmas with gifts that provide access to online gaming and so on – it is vital to fill the knowledge gap that often exists between parents and what their children are doing online.

Where children go then sex predators follow. That is a fact. We are not saying to parents live in fear or hold your child back from the opportunities that modern technologies provide. Encourage them to enjoy it but do so with the same degree of caution as you would apply in the same world.”

Visit www.thinkuknow.co.uk and register to keep children and young people safe from online offenders.
